According to the CDC, Native Americans (American Indians and Alaska Natives) have a greater chance of having diabetes than any other US racial group. Diabetes is the leading cause of kidney failure, a costly condition that requires dialysis or a kidney transplant for survival. Kidney failure can be delayed or prevented by controlling blood pressure and blood sugar, and by taking medicines that protect the kidneys. Good diabetes care includes regular kidney testing and receiving education about kidney disease and treatment. Kidney failure from diabetes among Native Americans was the highest compared to other races. However, this has steadily declined since the Indian Health Service (IHS) began using population health and team-based approaches to diabetes and kidney care - a potential model for other populations.

Thank you for partnering with us as we focus on Driving Out Diabetes. We look forward to seeing you on the course!

Best regards,

Rodney Butler | MPTN Tribal Council Chairman
Co-Chair MPTN Driving Out Diabetes

Richard E. Sebastian | MPTN Tribal Member
Co-Chair MPTN Driving Out Diabetes

Native Americans are twice as likely as whites to have diabetes.

Diabetes is the cause for two out of three Native Americans with kidney failure.

Kidney of failure from diabetes dropped by 54% in Native Americans between 1996 and 2013.
